Commission on Population and Development
Thirty-sixth session
31 March-4 April 2003
Agenda item 3
Follow-up actions to the recommendations of the International Conference on Population and Development

Letter dated 8 April 2003 from the Permanent Representative of the United States of America to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General

I am enclosing the United States explanation of its position on the draft resolution entitled "Population, education and development" (E/CN.9/2003/L.5), which was adopted by the Commission on Population and Development on 4 April 2003 (see annex). In our intervention under item 7, "Adoption of the report of the Commission on its thirty-sixth session", we requested that the attached explanation be circulated as a document of the thirty-sixth session of the Commission and included in its report.

(Signed) John D. Negroponte

Annex to the letter dated 8 April 2003 from the Permanent Representative of the United States of America to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General

Explanation of Position by Ambassador Sichan Siv, United States Representative to the Economic and Social Council, on Resolution E/CN.9/2003/L.5 (Population, Education and Development), During the Thirty-sixth Session of the Commission on Population and Development, April 4, 2003

Mr. Chairman,

The United States will join consensus on the draft resolution on the Population, Education, and Development. While there is much in the resolution that we support, there are other elements on which we have very strong reservations.

The United States understands that the word "reaffirming" in the first, second and third preambular paragraphs as it relates to the "Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, key actions for the further implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, the Beijing Platform for Action and further actions and initiatives to implement the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action;" does not constitute a reaffirmation of any language in those documents that can be interpreted as promoting the legalization or expansion of abortion services.

The United States fully supports the principle of voluntary choice in family planning. We strongly reiterate that in no case should abortion be promoted as a method of family planning, and that women who have recourse to abortion should in all cases have humane treatment and counseling provided for them.

The United States emphasizes its commitment to programs that address greater male involvement in pregnancy prevention and voluntary family planning efforts, and the need to stress the practices of delaying sexual initiation, abstinence, monogamy, fidelity, partner reduction and condom use in order to, among other reasons, prevent HIV infection.

We are pleased that the resolution notes the importance of education, especially of young people, with particular regard to women and girls. The United States attaches great importance to universal access to primary and secondary education, particularly for girls, as an essential and integral part of women's sustainable socio-economic development.

The United States stresses the need to further address the importance of family stability, the role of fathers and parent-child communication on abstinence, delaying sexual initiation, and responsible behavior. In this regard, the United States emphasizes the importance it attaches to the involvement of parents in decisions affecting children and adolescents in all aspects of sexual and reproductive health.

Finally, the United States notes that, like other UN resolutions, the documents adopted at this Session contain important political goals and coordinated plans of action, but are not intended to and do not create legally binding obligations on States under international law.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman

Summary

The thirty-sixth session of the Commission on Population and Development was held at United Nations Headquarters from 31 March to 4 April 2003. Its special theme for this session was "Population, education and development".

The documents before the Commission included a report on world population monitoring, focusing on the theme of the session. The report provided recent information on selected aspects of population, education and development, covering such topics as: trends in population, education and development; education and entry into reproductive life; the interrelationship between education and fertility; education, health and mortality; and education and international migration. The report found that education plays a key role in national development, in addition to being a prime component of individual well-being. Through education, individuals are empowered to make decisions and to exercise their choices in areas such as work, place of residence, family size, health and lifestyles and personal development. When aggregated, these individual choices and decisions have dramatic consequences for a population.

Other reports presented to the Commission covered the intersessional meeting of the Bureau of the Commission; monitoring of population programmes focusing on population, education and development; the flow of financial resources for assisting in the implementation of the Programme of Action; world demographic trends, programme implementation and progress of work in the field of population in 2002; and the draft programme of work of the Population Division for the biennium 2004-2005.

The Commission heard a statement by the special discussant, Professor Alaka Basu of Cornell University (Ithaca, United States of America), and keynote addresses by Dr. Paul Demeny of the Population Council (New York City, United States of America) and Professor Amartya Sen, Nobel Prize Laureate and Master of Trinity College (Cambridge, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland).

In its consideration of follow-up actions to the recommendations of the International Conference on Population and Development, the Commission adopted two resolutions. In one resolution, the Commission decided that the special theme for its thirty-eighth session, in 2005, should be "Population, development and HIV/AIDS, with particular emphasis on poverty".

In a second resolution, the Commission requested that the Population Division of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs continue its research and that the United Nations Population Fund continue its programming on the linkages between population, education and development, in close cooperation with all relevant bodies, funds, programmes and agencies of the United Nations system. The resolution also requested the Population Division to work in close cooperation with all relevant bodies, funds, programmes and agencies of the United Nations system to contribute its research findings to the implementation of the outcomes relevant to population, education and development of the Untied Nations conferences and summits. The resolution requested that the findings from that and related research on population, education and development should contribute to the next review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, scheduled for 2004, and, as appropriate, to other relevant conferences and reviews, including the World Summit for the Information Society and the regular reviews of the Dakar Declaration and the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS. The resolution also encouraged the Population Division to disseminate widely the results of its research, as a contribution to greater understanding and awareness of the interrelationships between population, education and development. Finally, the resolution encouraged the United Nations Population Fund to continue its support for population, education and development programmes.

The Commission also decided to take note of the documents submitted at its session (E/CN.9/2003/2-7). The Commission approved the draft provisional agenda for its thirty-seventh session, to be held in New York in 2004, and adopted its report on its thirty-sixth session.

Noting the importance of education, especially of young persons and in particular of girls and women, to achieving population and development goals and the contribution, to this end, of the relevant United Nations bodies, funds and programmes, including the United Nations Girls' Education Initiative,

Bearing in mind the objectives relevant to population, education and development of the United Nations Millennium Declaration,[6] and the outcome of other major United Nations conferences and summits and their reviews, in particular those relevant to population, education and development,

Bearing in mind also the recommendations relevant to population, education and development of the World Education Forum and the World Conference on Education for All[7] and the designation of 2003-2012 as the United Nations Literacy Decade,[8]

Noting the critical linkages between population, education and development,

Noting with concern the reported recent decline in resource flows for the implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development,

1. Requests the Population Division of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat to continue its research and the United Nations Population Fund to continue its programming, in close cooperation with all relevant bodies, funds, programmes and agencies of the United Nations system, including the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, on the linkages between population, education and development, including the relationships between population factors and the attainment of the goals of Education for All, giving attention to the way in which education interacts with health, particularly sexual and reproductive health, including HIV/AIDS, and to the way in which education influences the levels, trends and differentials of mortality, fertility, distribution and mobility, and the role of population and development policies, as well as gender inequalities, in such levels, trends and differentials;

2. Also requests the Population Division to work in close cooperation with all relevant bodies, funds, programmes and agencies of the United Nations system to contribute its research findings to the implementation of the outcomes relevant to population, education and development of the United Nations conferences and summits;

3. Further requests that the findings from that and related research on population, education and development should contribute to the next review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development[1] and, as appropriate, to other relevant conferences and reviews, including the World Summit for the Information Society and the regular reviews of the Dakar Declaration and the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS;[9]
